WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Scattered to numerous showers and thunderstorms are expected through this evening in the NW Mtns, NE CA, Northern Sierra, Far Eastside, and the MNF portion of the Mid Coast. Although thunderstorms will produce brief heavy rainfall at times, dry strikes are possible, and the abundance of strikes could cause enough ignitions to make initial attack difficult. Storm movement will be quicker than yesterday, so there is a higher risk of lightning ignitions. Outflow winds from storms on Sunday could reach 40-50 mph.

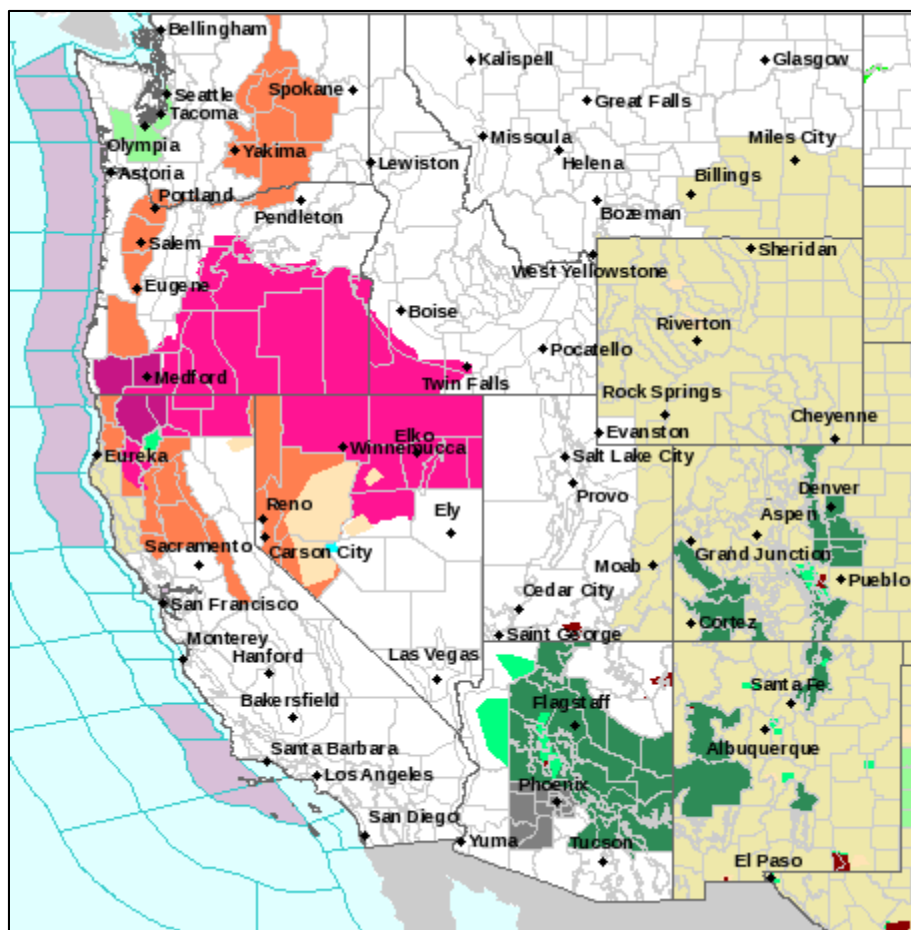

By Monday high pressure will begin to push the moist unstable air out of the region, although some clouds buildups are possible over the mountains and there may be an isolated shower or thunderstorm midday. But the trend will be to hotter and drier weather that will continue through Wednesday. The marine layer will be shallow and confined to the immediate coast. Areas outside of the marine layer will be 7-12 degrees warmer than normal. Typical summer time slope and sea breeze winds will prevail.

The strong high pressure center will relocate to the 4 Corners area and the Great Basin Thursday-Friday and allow the possibility of another surge of Monsoon moisture to move northward over the region and bring more shower and thunderstorm chances. But, at this time it only looks like isolated activity may develop in our eastern areas.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Fairly stable conditions will only allow for isolated afternoon showers and wet thunderstorms over the Sierra Crest during the next couple of days as high pressure centered off Point Conception moves directly overhead Monday. The high pressure area will move off to the east allowing scattered shower and thunderstorm activity to form over the mountains and deserts Tuesday through Friday. Isolated shower and thunderstorm activity may also occur over the coastal and valley locations Wednesday through Friday as a disturbance in the flow moves around the high pressure area. The shower and thunderstorm activity will decrease next weekend as the center of the high moves westward once again. There will be little change in temperature through next weekend, with 80s to low 90s across the mountains and 90s to 102 in the valleys. Minimum humidity will remain between 20% and 40% for the most part through next weekend, except there will be teens across the Central Coast Monday and Tuesday. No significant winds are anticipated through next weekend, except those associated with thunderstorm activity.
